Chemistry Supplies

Chemical Laboratory Equipment Suppliers Even with several experiments under your belt, such a challenge can be a bit overwhelming. In contrast to other lab activities, you're often not given any instructions or guidance – you're responsible for both designing and carrying out the lab. To make things worse, you're typically not armed with the (expensive!) tools that a practicing chemist would use in such a situation. Assuming that you are given 10 samples to identify, there are $10!$, or 3,628,800 ways to place the labels, only one of which is correct. Clearly, guessing isn't really going to get the job done; beyond that, "guessing" isn't really a valid experimental design element anyway.
